December Café Special

Did you know that millions of people in the United States won't be celebrating Christmas this December?

That's right. Tens of millions of Americans don't celebrate Christmas religiously, either as followers of non-Christian religions or as individuals with no religious affiliation.

Because of the popular and highly visible Christmas tradition with its plethora of Santa Claus, ornaments, and Christmas fanfare, it's easy to overlook the depth of the diversity present in America and our workplace during this season. In reality, various events, both spiritual, religious, and tradition based, are being celebrated.

It used to be that being inclusive meant sending out politically correct "Happy Holidays" greeting cards and changing Christmas office parties to "holiday parties." Today, celebrating inclusiveness and diversity is about more than just changing labels and titles. It's about using the holiday celebration time to be with personal friends, family, and our own work family to build understanding and awareness about each other.

The month of December also gives us the most number of "Teachable Moments" to learn about other groups. The celebration of Christmas, the Jewish Hanukkah, the Buddhist Rohatsu, and the African-American Kwanzaa, all occur in December. Each of these celebrations is very different in their practices and significance. The challenge is to encourage inclusion and be supportive of religious and cultural diversity and not violate any laws.

A good way to approach diversity over the holiday season is to use it as an educational opportunity, as some public schools do. In the workplace, we can recognize the diverse cultures our employees come from and their various observances.

This December, the Diversity Council's International Committee, in collaboration with Public Works Employee Affinity groups, is organizing a Multicultural Festival to help us discover various cultures by taking in the sights, sounds, and tastes that reflect each distinct flavor and heritage.

Can you sing, dance, or play a musical instrument? Can you cook a traditional dish from your culture or share a story about how your family celebrates the holidays? We invite you to share your holiday observances with us through stories, poetry, art, music, dancing, singing, foods, or arts and crafts. For more information, please contact Flora Wieggers at (626) 458-5193 or Steve Milewski at (626) 458-3573.

Café Quote of the Month

"I like to compare the holiday season with the way a child listens to a favorite story. The pleasure is in the familiar way the story begins, the anticipation of familiar turns it takes, the familiar moments of suspense, and the familiar climax and ending."

- Fred Rogers
